Top risk flags

- RISK Financial records appear inconsistent or unverifiable

Decision makers flag financial evidence that is inconsistent or hard to verify — for example, large recent deposits that do not match stated income. This can indicate borrowed funds or fabricated records, which may be treated as evidence of deception under s109 of the Migration Act.
- RISK Limited or concerning travel history

Travel history is a key factor in genuine visitor assessments. Applicants with no international travel history may face greater scrutiny. Any prior visa overstay or immigration non-compliance significantly increases the risk of refusal under clause 600.211 and PIC 4013.
- ELAG Weak or missing host invitation evidence

When the stated purpose of the visit is to see an Australian resident (family or friends), decision makers look for corroborating evidence from the host. Without an invitation letter or proof of the host's Australian status, the travel purpose is harder to verify.
- ELAG Insufficient funds for intended length of stay

While there is no fixed statutory dollar threshold, decision makers assess whether the applicant can genuinely support themselves during the proposed visit without working unlawfully or relying on social support. Low balances relative to the proposed stay or an inability to explain income sources increases refusal risk.
- ELAG Insufficient evidence of ties to home country

Decision makers assess whether the applicant is likely to return home after their visit. Weak ties to the home country — such as no stable employment, no property, no family dependants, or a history of overstaying visas — significantly increase refusal risk under clause 600.211.
